

The FCC's choice to allow cross ownership of mass media outlets is an outright attack against the democratic process. As these medias conglomerate, information becomes narrow and streamlined, reflecting the views of the big business elite. The job of government agencies is to allow a more diverse dispartment of information so that the citizens of this country can make better and more informed choices. By lifting the FCC's previous ban, the FCC is allowing a blatant attack against the basics of democracy by allowing already too large media conglomerates even more control over how and WHAT information is distributed to the people. Its bad enough that GE owns NBC.

Sincerely, Brian Higbee